Work through these after trying the questions yourself.

11.6 A rise in real output.

11.7 It is about living standards — health, education and freedom — not just income.

11.8 Income, health (life expectancy) and education.

11.9 From 0 to 1.

11.10 Yes — if the extra income goes to only a few people.

11.11 GDP doubling means output and income have risen — that is economic growth. But development is about living standards for people in general. Here the gains go to a few rich families while most people's health and education (schools and hospitals) do not improve, so the wider standard of living barely rises — growth without much development.
