

Contrast linkers

English B2

What this topic teaches

Contrast is the soul of argument . English has a whole shelf of linkers that disagree politely, and they follow different grammar rules – which is why this is a B2 topic and not a vocabulary list.

- Although it rained, we played. (clause after although)
- Despite the rain, we played. (a noun after despite)
- It rained. However, we played. (a new sentence)
- Memory hook: the linkers are colleagues with the same job – contrast – but different tools. Learn the tool, not just the word.

The clause team: although, though, even though, whereas, while

These take a full clause (subject + verb).

- Although it rained, we played. – the standard.
- Though is the informal twin: same grammar, warmer sound. It can even float to the end: It rained. We played, though.
- Even though is although with emphasis : Even though the test was brutal , everyone passed.
- Whereas / while compare two facts side by side: I like coffee, whereas my sister likes tea. – contrast without surprise, just difference.

The noun team: despite, in spite of These take a noun or -ing, never a full clause.

- Despite the rain, we played. / In spite of being tired, she kept working.
- △ “Despite it rained” × – a clause needs although. “Despite of” × – despite needs no of; in spite of hoards them both.
- △ Want a clause anyway? Add the fact that: Despite the fact that it rained, we played. Heavy but legal – the footballer of linkers.

The sentence team: however, nevertheless, on the other hand

These start a new sentence, usually with a comma.

- The test was brutal. However, everyone passed.
- The hotel was expensive. Nevertheless, we stayed. (formal, slightly heroic)

- Noodles are cheap. On the other hand, the canteen's are a crime.
- Δ However is not but: “It rained, however, we played” $\times$ – that’s a comma splice . However needs a full stop or semicolon before it: *It rained. However, we played.*

Watch out: traps for Chinese speakers

- Δ ... has no English twin. “Although it rained, but we played” $\times$ – one linker per contrast, the same rule as because/so from A2. The old traps never die; they just get taller.
- Δ Match the tool to the grammar. Clause $\rightarrow$ although. Noun $\rightarrow$ despite. New sentence $\rightarrow$ however. The meaning is identical; the grammar is the exam.
- Δ despite* and in spite of are not “despite of”. The of belongs to in spite of alone. They share a shelf, not a toolbox.
- Δ while* wears two hats. Contrast: I like tea, while she likes coffee. Time: While I was cooking, the phone rang. The sentence tells you which hat; context is the mirror.

Say it aloud

Argue with yourself, politely, in three tools.

- Although I love noodles, I should eat less of them. Despite loving noodles, I should eat less. I love noodles. However, I should eat less.
- Whereas my brother studies at midnight, I study at dawn . We meet at breakfast, both wrong.
- It rained on the school trip. Nevertheless, we sang. The rain had no answer to that.

Check yourself

Answer first, then read the explanation.

1. ____ it rained, we played. (clause) – Although / Even though. A clause takes the clause team.
2. ____ the rain, we played. (noun) – Despite / In spite of. A noun takes the noun team.
3. It rained. ____, we played. (new sentence) – However. The sentence team, with its comma.
4. “Although it rained, but we played.” – $\times \rightarrow$ drop the but. One linker per contrast.
5. I like coffee, ____ my sister likes tea. (side-by-side difference) – whereas / while. Contrast without surprise.