- 5 Developing ideas

1 Approach

Writing an Informal Email

Approach

Cover every prompt, friendly tone

- cover every prompt 提示 – tick each one
- warm & informal 非正式 tone – write as if talking

Missing one bullet loses content marks.
Ask questions too.

Friendly email: cover every point, natural tone

Writing an Informal Email

Approach

Email structure

Hi Sam,

Write back soon,
Anna

- greeting 问候语: Hi Sam,
- short paragraphs 段落 – one idea each
- closing 结束语: Write back soon,
+ your name

Writing an Informal Email

Approach

The shape of a good informal email

Hi Sam,
Thanks for your email! How are you?

Write back soon,
Alex
120-160 words

- friendly greeting
warm opening –
ask them questions too
- one prompt in each paragraph – tick each one off as you write it
- friendly closing,
then your name

The shape of a good informal email

Writing an Informal Email └ Approach Greeting and ending ■ Start with a greeting 问候语: Hi Sam, or Dear Anna, ■ End with a friendly closing 结束语: Write back soon, or See you soon, then your name.	Writing an Informal Email └ Approach Useful informal language short forms 缩略形式 I'm, don't, can't openers Guess what! feelings I can't wait to... Friendly phrases (How are you?) make the email feel personal.

Writing an Informal Email └ Approach Developing ideas weak "I loved the trip." developed 展开的 "I loved the trip because we saw an old castle." Add a reason 原因, example 例子 or detail 细节. Aim for 120–160 words.	Writing an Informal Email └ Approach Develop your ideas "I loved the trip." weak - it only names the idea ↓ + a reason "I loved the trip because we saw an old castle." ↓ + a detail or an example "I loved the trip because we saw an old castle - its walls are more than 800 years old!" developed ideas like this earn the content marks more content marks Each extra reason or detail makes the idea stronger

Writing an Informal Email └ Approach A model informal email Notice the greeting, the news, the reason, and the sign-off. Hi Sam, Guess what – I finally visited the new science museum you told me about! I loved it, especially the space room, because you can sit inside a model capsule and hear the launch. The best part was the evening show. We stayed until it closed. Why don't you come with me next month? Let me know which weekend suits you. See you soon, Wei Four moves: greet, give the news, add a reason or detail, and close with a question. Check the tone is friendly, then fix small grammar and spelling mistakes.	Writing an Informal Email └ Approach Exam tips ■ Open warmly: "Thanks for your email!" or "Great to hear from you!" sets the informal tone at once. ■ Use short forms (I'm, don't, can't). They are correct here and make you sound like a friend. ■ Give each prompt in the task its own short paragraph, and add one detail or reason to each. ■ Close like a friend: "Write back soon," plus your first name only, never a full name. ■ Keep the style informal from the first line to the last; one "Dear Sir" in the middle breaks the whole email.

2 Recap

Writing an Informal Email
↳ Recap

Worked example – opening an informal email

Improve this opening to a friend: “Dear Sir. I am writing to inform you that I will visit.”

- Wrong register the other way – far too formal for a friend.
- “Dear Sir” and “I am writing to inform you” belong in a business letter.
- “Hi Mei! Guess what – I’m finally coming to visit next month! I can’t wait to see you.”
- Informal = first name, contractions, exclamation marks, and real warmth.

An informal email should sound like talking. Ask a question and react to their news – examiners reward a genuine sense of a real reader.
